Re: Radioactivity limits in materials that could possibly reach the general public.

Dear NRC:

One again, the answer is ZERO! Zero radioactivity anywhere that is not being fully regulated at all times. This includes 'recycled' metals, landfills and any other site not being treated and monitored specifically as a nuclear disposal site.

Over and over and over, we see that even in the best possible scenario, with the NRC on the job every inch of the way, with corporations showing the compassion and social responsibility of MOther Theresa, mistakes happen, The victims are always the innocent.

The NRC and its predecessor the AEC have been telling the public for decades that everything is fine, and radiation is safe. Then thousands die over time, and we are supposed to learn from this. Hindsight is supposed to be 2020. Don't you ever learn??
