Another piece of info came to my mind this morning:

Sometime last fall, I believe, [REDACTED] who was part of the Human Performance team at the time came to me after having observed a Maintenance training class. [REDACTED] was concerned because technicians in the class had spoken up about their superintendent [REDACTED] insisting that they do "unsafe" things in the plant to keep production high and meet the schedule. This was clearly counter to what [REDACTED] and [REDACTED] team were teaching. [REDACTED] came to me to get "coaching" on what to do about it. I urged [REDACTED] to speak with [REDACTED] for whom [REDACTED] worked since [REDACTED] was uncomfortable going to [REDACTED] directly. [REDACTED] agreed to do so. I also gave [REDACTED] a "head's up" that [REDACTED] would be coming to him and that I thought the issue definitely warranted his attention since it involved nuclear and industrial safety. I checked back later with [REDACTED] to see if anything had occurred. [REDACTED] reported to me that it took quite a while for [REDACTED] to connect with [REDACTED] and that he didn't seem to take it as seriously as [REDACTED] and I did, and certainly not as seriously as the technicians felt about it. I also believe some complaints were filed with Employee Concerns about [REDACTED] behaviors and instructions to workers re. safety. One of his supervisors, [REDACTED] I believe his name is, came to me personally and discussed similar concerns.

[REDACTED] are still employed at the plant. [REDACTED] is not part of the current organization to my knowledge, though still on the payroll.

Thanks,
Kymn
