IE INFORMATION NOTICE NO. 82-39: SERVICE DEGRADATION OF THICK WALL STAINLESS
STEEL RECIRCULATION SYSTEM PIPING AT A BWR
PLANT

Addressees:

All boiling water reactor facilities holding an operating license (OL) or construction permit (CP).

Purpose:

This notice is to provide licensees and construction permit holders available information about the degradation of the primary pressure boundary at Nine Mile Point Unit 1 due to intergranular stress corrosion cracking. Recipients should review this information relative to their facilities. If NRC evaluation so indicates, further licensee action may be requested. In the interim, we expect licensees to review the relevance of this information for applicability to their facilities.

Description of Circumstances:

The Nine Mile Point Nuclear Station Unit 1 (NMP Unit 1) was shut down in order to replace recirculation pump seals. On March 23, 1982, leakage was visually detected at two of the ten recirculation loop safe ends during a primary system hydrotest at 900 psig to test the seals. Further visual inspection identified three pin-hole indications and a single 1/4-inch long axial indication, all of which were located in the heat affected zone of the welds where the safe end joined the pipe.

On March 26, 1982, an ultrasonic examination of the two affected safe ends and one other safe end confirmed the presence of intermittent cracking indications around the pipe's inside diameter. Further ultrasonic examination of the welds joining the pump discharge casing to the riser elbow also revealed cracking in weld heat affected zones on the inside diameter (ID) of the elbows. This was later confirmed by dye penetrant examination.

Because the cracks were confirmed at the welds of the safe ends and riser elbows, the ultrasonic examination was extended to all of the remaining welds in the five loops of the primary system, wherever radiation levels permitted. The results of this examination show ID cracking at a large number of the welds examined.

Two boat samples removed from the area of the through-wall cracks in one safe end were sent to General Electric and Battelle Laboratories, respectively, for evaluation. A boat sample from the crack region of the elbow weld was also evaluated by Sylvester Associates, consultants to the licensee. The results of these metallurgical evaluations concluded the degradation was due to intergranular stress corrosion cracking (IGSCC) in the sensitized region of the welds' heat affected zones. Further metallurgical investigation is being pursued to determine, as far as possible, the probable cause(s) of the problem.

Based on the results of the examinations and investigations to date, the licensee will replace the safe ends and 28-inch recirculation piping in all five loops of the system. Replacement of the branch piping out to the first isolation valve is also being considered; however, no final decision in this regard has been made at this time.

All replacement material will be stainless steel type 316 nuclear grade consistent with NUREG-0313, Revision 1 requirements. The actual replacement will be accomplished in accordance with ASME Boiler and Pressure Vessel Code, Section XI, 1977 Edition and Addenda through summer 1978. Welding will be performed in accordance with Section IX, 1978. Fitup requirements will be in accordance with ANSI Pressure Piping Code B31.1-1977 and Addenda through winter 1979. The replaced system configuration will duplicate the original design.

All ten recirculation system safe ends at NMP Unit 1 had been previously examined volumetrically by ultrasonic techniques at each refueling outage under an augmented inservice inspection program. This was in addition to the ASME code required inservice inspection program applied to other system welds. The augmented program was required because of IGSCC problems experienced with furnace-sensitized safe ends at this and other BWR plants.

It is important to note that the programs conducted under the normal and augmented programs did not indicate a pending problem. Examinations were performed during 1979 and 1981. The procedure employed during the 1981 augmented program for the safe ends was based on ultrasonic test (UT) using the EPRI transducer with a flat calibration block which was stated to be capable of detecting IGSCC at the code required gain or sensitivity level. The procedure differed from the GE recommended procedures in specifying less gain, and differed significantly in the calibration standards and data recording requirements, thus resulting in reduced sensitivity compared to the GE recommended procedures.

After leakage was visually observed on March 23, 1982, a UT examination of the safe ends was performed using the same method employed in the 1981 augmented program. Many safe ends exhibited code "reportable," but not rejectable indications. However, when an ultrasonic sensitivity of 10 decibels above code calibration sensitivity was employed, greater reliability was realized in detecting the presence and full extent of the IGSCC problems with the thick wall piping welds, both at the safe ends and at other locations in the reactor coolant system. The generic implications of the above variances is under further review by the NRC staff.

This IE information notice is to advise licensees of further occurrences of the prevailing IGSCC problem that is under continuing review by the NRC staff.

Based on the results of the examinations and investigations to date, the licensee will replace the safe ends and 28-inch recirculation piping in all five loops of the system. The replaced system configuration will duplicate the original design.

All ten recirculation system safe ends at NMP Unit 1 had been previously examined volumetrically by ultrasonic techniques at each refueling outage under an augmented inservice inspection program. This was required because of IGSCC problems experienced, particularly with furnace-sensitized safe ends, at this and other BWR plants. It is important to note that these examinations, the last conducted in March 1981, did not indicate a pending problem.

It also should be noted that the ultrasonic procedures used in previous examinations of the safe ends (i.e., 1979 and 1981) as well as the current examination were essentially patterned after techniques developed by General Electric and EPRI for detecting IGSCC in stainless steel piping welds. More importantly, in using the normal ultrasonic methods during this examination, many of the welds exhibited code "reportable" indications. However, when an ultrasonic sensitivity of 10 decibels above calibration sensitivity was employed, greater reliability was realized in detecting the presence and full extent of the IGSCC problem with the thick wall piping welds.

This IE information notice is to advise licensees of further occurrences of the prevailing generic IGSCC problem that is under continuing review by the NRC staff. If NRC evaluation so indicates, further licensee action may be requested. In the interim, we expect licensees to review the relevance of this information for applicability to their facilities.
