NRC INFORMATION NOTICE NO. 87-53: AUXILIARY FEEDWATER PUMP TRIPS
RESULTING FROM LOW SUCTION PRESSURE

Addressees:

All holders of operating licenses or construction permits for nuclear power reactors.

Purpose:

This information notice is being provided to alert addressees to potential problems resulting from low suction pressure trips of auxiliary feedwater (AFW) pumps which may contribute to system unavailability. It is expected that recipients will review the information for applicability to their facilities and consider actions, as appropriate, to avoid similar problems. However, suggestions contained in this information notice do not constitute NRC requirements; therefore, no specific action or written response is required.

Description of Circumstances:

Described herein are four events during which the AFW pumps tripped on low suction pressure trip signals as a result of brief suction pressure oscillations or fluctuations which occurred despite the availability of sufficient steady-state net positive suction head (NPSH). These events occurred at Millstone 3, D.C. Cook 1, Trojan, and Zion 2.

Millstone 3 Event

On January 27, 1987, the "A" motor-driven auxiliary feedwater (MDAFW) pump tripped seconds after being started on three different occasions during quarterly surveillance testing at Millstone Unit 3 while the reactor was operating at 100% power. On January 29, 1987, the "B" MDAFW pump tripped seconds after it was started during similar testing. Subsequently, both pumps were declared inoperable. The licensee determined that the trips were caused by brief suction pressure oscillations that resulted in low suction pressure trip signals. The suction pressure oscillations were induced by hydraulic hammering in the pump discharge line. The hydraulic hammering occurred with the system valve aligned for testing: the pumps isolated from the steam generators and the flow bypassed through the recirculating line back to the demineralized water storage tank. The licensee speculated that the source of the hydraulic hammering was either the closed motor-operated valve or the check valve in the pump discharge line. A subsequent investigation by the licensee revealed that significant pump suction pressure oscillations could also occur during other pump modes of operation. The licensee has removed the suction pressure trips from the MDAFW pumps to preclude similar low pressure pump trips.

D.C. Cook 1 Event

On October 27, 1985, while the reactor was in hot standby, with the West MDAFW pump in service and the TDAFW pump being tested, the West MDAFW pump tripped on low suction pressure and the TDAFW pump was declared inoperable following testing. This placed the plant in a technical specification action statement. A faulty governor caused turbine speed oscillations that resulted in pressure fluctuations on the suction side of the MDAFW pump. The MDAFW and the TDAFW pumps share a common suction header.

As a corrective action, the licensee removed the low suction pressure trip feature and replaced it with an alarm/operator action combination. The alarm actuates when the water level in the condensate storage tank drops to the point where 14 minutes remain before the level would reach the center line of the suction pipe for the AFW pumps. This time is deemed sufficient for the operator to take appropriate actions to prevent pump damage.

Trojan Event

Following a reactor trip from full power on July 20, 1985, the diesel-driven AFW and the turbine-driven AFW (TDAFW) pumps automatically started; however, the diesel-driven AFW pump tripped on low suction pressure during the starting sequence. The operator blocked the diesel-driven AFW low suction pressure trip and restarted the pump successfully. Several minutes later, the TDAFW pump also tripped on low suction pressure while it was aligned to the condensate storage tank. The operator throttled down the AFW pump discharge valves and restarted the turbine-driven pump without further incident.

The low suction pressure trips occurred because excessive combined suction flow was being drawn by the two AFW pumps from a single suction header. The excessive suction flow resulted from an overshooting of the flow control valve, which caused a turbine speed overshoot, and consequently created a momentary pressure drop. Because the low pressure condition existed only momentarily, the licensee adjusted the time delays for bypass of the low suction pressure trips to provide sufficient time for the suction flow to stabilize.

Zion 2 Event

On December 11, 1981, the unit's two MDAFW pumps started automatically following a reactor trip and a subsequent low-low level in one of the steam generators; however, the pumps immediately tripped on low suction pressure. The pumps were promptly manually restarted from the control room without further complications. The turbine-driven pump was out of service for maintenance at the time of the event.

The licensee's subsequent investigation indicated that the simultaneous start of the two MDAFW pumps caused the suction pressure to briefly drop below the trip setpoints and consequently tripped the pumps. A split discharge header arrangement had been used when the TDAFW pump was out of service, i.e., one of the MDAFW pumps was aligned to the discharge header of the TDAFW pump. This arrangement provided separate feedwater paths to the steam generators. Because of this alignment, pressure was momentarily reduced in the pump suction line during pump start; this pressure reduction was sensed by the pump trip sensors. To eliminate the problem, the licensee installed a time-delay relay in the control circuitry of the two MDAFW pumps to bypass the low suction pressure trips during the momentary low pressure condition during pump start.

Discussion:

These events illustrate a common-mode failure of the auxiliary feedwater pumps that could result in a total or partial loss of the AFW system. The pump trips were caused by brief low pressure oscillations that occurred during pump start despite sufficient steady-state net positive suction head (NPSH). Although the four events described herein address only the AFW system, similar pressure transients can occur in other systems where the pump arrangement is susceptible to sudden suction pressure drops. Several corrective actions have been taken by the affected licensees: extending the time delay associated with the low suction pressure trip function, removing the trip function, or replacing the automatic trip function with an alarm/operator action combination. It should be noted that the low suction pressure trip function is provided to protect the centrifugal pump from cavitation. The removal of this trip function, either automatic or manual, may leave the pump without adequate protection.
