Subject: On-site nuclear waste

My state, Washington, has been a proving ground for demonstrating ways to mishandle nuclear waste. We've known for decades that on-site storage is a very bad idea. Now, with the (literally) burning example of Fukushima Daiichi, we wonder what combination of delusion, arrogance, denial, and bureaucratic buck-passing could possibly account for the NRC wanting to continue using on-site storage. It is clearly not just a threat to people but represents a danger to the facility. We are alarmed and mystified.
