Good morning,

Leadership

While I have this in my mind, I want to bring it to your attention. About three years ago, there was a public meeting in Vermont where at least one NRC employee was attacked by a member of the public who threw some dried substance at him. My guess would be that it was manure, however Don described it to me as "humus."

Here is all the action taken by senior level NRC management people in response:

(nothing)

Did you see anything? There was no action taken.

In my opinion, if you expect the best efforts of good people on your behalf, you had better treat them as if they have some value. In this case, this was not done by senior executive service people or the commission, either.

Thank you,

Tom Gurdziel
