I am very concerned about anyone being recklessly and negligently exposed to radiation. It is a scientific fact known for the last 60 years and more that nuclear radiation always causes damage to the membranes of cells. That is the damage that it starts with for short term exposure. The longer and stronger the exposure, the worse the cellular damage. With radiation, the cellular damage is scientifically proven to be cause and effect along linear graphing with the more exposure or longer exposure causing the effect to be proportionately increased. It is negligent and reckless for the nuclear industry to have behaved the way it has world-wide, particularly with Hanford Nuclear Plant, Chernobyl, and Fukushima. Much of the northern hemisphere of this earth, which is our only home to nest and survive, now has widespread areas directly contaminated by nuclear accidents that weren't supposed to happen according to the decision-makers. It is always a matter of when, not if. It is clear that much more regulation is needed for nuclear materials, and, if not, then the nuclear industries should be shut down due to human inability to keep the most dangerous substances on earth contained properly, and this type of responsible decision-making has clearly not happened. Infractions of the rules need to be treated seriously, not like slaps on the back of the hand. The fines need to be
