I know very little about nuclear energy except to understand that it is inexhaustible and relatively inexpensive compared to other fuels, all of which coal, an environment despoiler, and sun power, not yet available and rapidly becoming scarce and too ridiculous.

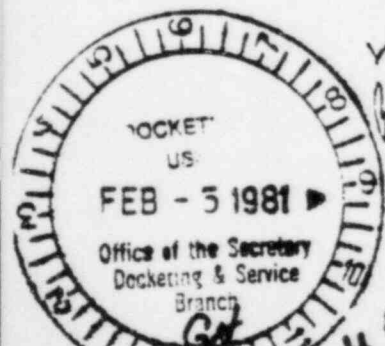

Eventually, and the "sooner the quicker" we solve the problems of waste disposal and radiation exposure we will come, inevitably to this goal, it may involve experiment, resulting sometimes in plant destruction, even small casualties and deaths. But "man's hands are by ordinary soils in climbing" and cannot be avoided forever in any case.

I recommend, such as my opinion carries undetectable weight, that Docket 50-239SP be resolved in immediate hard-pressed action toward resolving our problems.

Many others agree with the above altho few will take the trouble to say so.
