OFFICE OF SECRETARY
DOCKETING & RECORDS

Mosbaugh: Speaking of the duty manager, there was a funny comment made in the meeting down there this morning by McCoy about, uh, the shift supervisor calls the duty manager, the duty manager calls the corporate duty manager calls the president of the company.

Aufdenkampe: [Inaudible]

Mosbaugh: He calls the VP? And the VP calls the president of the company?

Aufdenkampe: [Inaudible] Yea, I thought that was interesting.

Chestnut: The president of the corporate company for Georgia Power or Alabama Power. Your talking about [inaudible].

Aufdenkampe: [Inaudible]

Chestnut: Sure.

Mosbaugh: I just -- thought that -- I have been involved in the duty manager and I never -- and I think I was aware of what the communications path, was and I just don't think that's what's happened -- what happens. I just -- that was just real interesting to me.

Chestnut: That seems kind of surprising to me, too.

Mosbaugh: Who are they calling? I mean, if I call -- if I call, you know -- if I call --

Aufdenkampe or Chestnut: [Inaudible]... engineering duty... [inaudible]

Mosbaugh: Okay. You know, I call, I call Shipman and then Shipman will sometimes talk to McCoy or to Hairston-

Chestnut: Um hum.

Mosbaugh: But that was the extent of --

Chestnut: There are a lot of calls to Farley. I know they called Farley a lot.

Mosbaugh: They who called Farley?

Chestnut: The VP.

Mosbaugh: Oh. They're calling Farley?

Chestnut: Yeah. A good bit. I know they call Farley a lot. But it wasn't until recently I started hearing this thing about them calling -- about calling -- I can't imagine them calling Dahlberg because Dahlberg probably knows how many plants he has, but he doesn't know which ones are running [inaudible]. Jim Miller paid attention to which plants were running and, and the status of them, but I think Dahlberg is more concerned about the market.

Mosbaugh: Yeah.

Chestnut: How much power we sold.
