Dear Don:

Regarding our telephone conversation on the merger being considered between Tidewater Oil Company and Getty Oil Company, Getty Oil Company would be the surviving Corporation.

Petrotomics Company, a formal Partnership, created under Wyoming Uniform Partnership Act, would continue doing business in that name, the Partners being Getty Oil Company (Managing Partner), Skelly Oil Company and Kerr-McGee Corporation.

Source Material License SVA-551 was issued to Petrotomics Company on March 8, 1962, and was subsequently extended, and is now current. Inasmuch as this is a matter of one of four partners acquiring by operation of law, the interest of one of the other three and the Partnership continuing doing business in that name, we do not believe there is a transfer or assignment of the license involved, as contemplated by 10 CFR 40.46.

We desire to keep your office advised of the matter and would appreciate your advice if anything need be done, insofar as you are concerned, respecting this license.

As you know, Petrotomics Company completed the Contractual production for the A. E. C. in 1966, and did not participate in the stretch-out program, so has no current production Contract with the A. E. C., but is producing exclusively for the private market. Also, we would appreciate your advice as to the license requirements, if a new mill were to be constructed, or the present mill expanded in capacity, neither of which would be producing for A. E. C. Contract.

Shirley Basin is still out in the sticks, and the wind still blows!
