Although RES agrees that NRC should proceed with this ongoing rulemaking, the Commission paper and supporting documents such as the regulatory analysis should be modified to state that this consolidation of widely dispersed requirements will result in a greater degree of safety along with cost savings by not requiring a license amendment every time a procedure is changed. The Commission paper, as now written, would indicate that there is little incentive for continuing on with this rulemaking since it states on page 9 of the Commission paper that the effect of selecting the recommended alternative would be that the staff does not expect any change in worker or public dose or significant cost or savings.
