Leo,

Your note raises questions of (a) individual committee member attendance and (b) individual committee member participation in the upcoming meeting.

As we have discussed previously, the presentation to the Advisory Committee on Reactor Safeguards (ACRS) and the USNRC staff, now scheduled for March 7, 1997, will cover the results of the committee's phase 2 efforts as documented in the final report that you have received. The presentation will be led by the chairman, Douglas Chapin. The entire 14-member committee will be invited to attend both presentations. However, being volunteers with very demanding schedules, I cannot guarantee that all or any individual member (other than the chair) will be able to attend.

As for participation, the planned format will involve Dr. Chapin leading the presentation and then directing the ensuing questions to individual committee members as appropriate. The "committee's" answers to questions about the substance of the report should mimic the text of the approved report. Answers by individuals, or questions not on the subject of the report and study, will be identified as such. In other words, committee members expressing individual opinions on subjects are just that, individual opinions.
