Sorry about the delay! If I received the memo, it either got lost in our move or deleted inadvertently (no wrongdoing here)!

I have always believed it trying to do what is right!

I also try to be trustworthy!

However, I do recognize that there are those that believe in doing anything that the law allows , and /or anything that they can get by with, without being caught.

With this in mind, I vote for option 3: Make all of the wrongdoing requirements a Category C, and also make the procedure element a Category C.

With respect to the 2nd issue:

I do believe that States should have "conflict of interest" requirements established by statute. The term "objectivity" as used may not be the best term. We all would like to think that we are objective, but we all suffer from individual biases.

I hope these comments are not "knee jerk" responses!
